L3Harris Press Release

SEP 15, 2020

ARLINGTON, Texas

Highlights:

- Contract for F-16 simulator and egress trainer
- Training solution will increase flight proficiency and safety for pilots
- Solutions will be developed and built in Arlington, Texas

The Royal Air Force of Oman has selected L3Harris Technologies (NYSE: LHX) to provide F-16 training simulation and support solutions that will enhance the Royal Air Force of Oman's training capabilities and improve pilot safety and proficiency.

L3Harris will provide the Oman Ministry of Defense with F-16 simulator and egress trainers that will provide cost-effective, comprehensive aircrew training. The training systems can also replicate diverse training events through high-fidelity and immersive synthetic environments.

"L3Harris is providing the Sultanate of Oman with the next-gen training systems that will benefit pilot safety and proficiency, while enabling the Royal Air Force of Oman to up-level their performance capabilities," said Lenny Genna, President, Military Training, L3Harris Technologies. "The F-16 has been the world's most sought-after fighter aircraft for two decades, and as a global leader in aviation training, L3Harris will continue to deliver and support training systems and equipment that enhance operations for all of our contracted partners worldwide."

The training devices will be built at the L3Harris Military Training and Simulation Division in Arlington, Texas. The Training Systems and support services will be delivered, installed, and provided to the Royal Air Force of Oman at the Air Force's directed locations.
